Days of heaven for small stocks
Broken companies benefiting from speculators

SAN FRANCISCO (CBS.MW) -- Sensing a holiday mood, small investors are chasing once-broken Internet and other stocks, hoping for a quick, speculative return.

Ken Calhoun, who heads Day Trading University sees a technical reason for the small-stock euphoria. The Securities & Exchange Commission's $25,000 margin rule, effective in late September, "locked out the small day-trader and the market roars," says Calhoun. The rule put higher cash requirements on so-called pattern day-traders, those who regularly buy and sell an individual stock in a single trading period. A $25,000 minimum required balance in some day-traders' brokerage accounts has robbed liquidity from many Nasdaq stocks, he contends.

"We saw nice 3-4 point intraday moves in core trading stocks like Verisign and QLogic and others," says Calhoun, who has been laying out this theory since May. "The best day-trading opportunities in the last 18 months are occurring here in October and November." With fewer small investors able to speculate, Nasdaq market
